RSref144304	Cancelled	7/2/2020	Hello, I'm loving the new Trove! Looks great and is much more user friendly. However it possible to return the feature of old Trove which highlights your key search words in newspaper articles (on the newsprint)? It's easier to spot the article you are looking for, particularly as the newsprint can sometimes be small and difficult to read. RSref144312	Completed	7/2/2020	Congratulations on the new version of TROVE. I'm in the US and have benefited from the service and the content since 2008. I was wondering if you are taking feedback as you continue to make improvements. One of the changes I noticed from the previous version, and one I've unfortunately seen in other similar applications has to do with returning to the list after reviewing the selected item. Instead of landing on the item selected, the list returns to the top of the page. Having to page again and be sure of which item was just reviewed is not always easy. Just a thought. Great work and a fantastic resource.	Dear [name redacted], Thanks for your feedback and for trying new Trove. We are glad to hear that you like the new design. We have been making incremental improvements since the launch of the new Trove. One of the first was restoring the function to return you to the item, not the top of the page, when you navigate back to your search results. This should be working correctly for you now. We know there have been some bugs since the rollout, and we are continuing development to resolve them. Hopefully, the new features – such as the modern, mobile-friendly design, collaborative lists, and greater access to collections from the National Library's extensive network of partners – make your Trove experience even more rewarding. After you've had a chance to get used to the new Trove, we hope you find it even more helpful than the old one. Thanks again for your feedback and for being a dedicated Voluntrove. Thank you for updating such a well-used resource. However, there is one aspect of the 'new' TROVE that makes finding a specific reference very difficult and time consuming, particularly if searching in certain newspapers, and that is that the keyword(s) entered in the advanced search page is/are no longer highlighted in the text or the article itself. This means having to scroll slowly through the text searching for the word(s), or through the article itself (even more	Dear [name redacted], Thanks for your feedback and for trying new Trove. RSref144328	Completed	7/2/2020	I am a regular registered user of Trove (since 2008) and I note in the new Trove that lists can contain a maximum of 1000 items. I ask because I now have 2 Private lists which are each over the limit. These are used for my family history research. I am enjoying the new Trove and getting used to the changes. I cannot find anywhere what might happen to lists that are OVER the 1000 items. So my Question is: Should I cull those lists? Or what do you recommend. Many thanks [name redacted]	Dear [name redacted], Thank you for your positive feedback and we hope the redesign continues to make your Trove experience even more rewarding. Trove has been designed to provide a warning when you attempt to add items to a list over 1,000 items. This is currently happening if you add items to a list in Trove itself, however we have identified that if you add items from the newspapers viewer then the limit is not being applied. Our developers are working on fixing this. Existing lists with over 1,000 items will not reduce and should stay as is. You will not however be able to create any new lists or update existing lists with over 1,000 items. Thanks again for your support of Trove. It has been designed based on feedback from our community - as well as massive changes in search functionality - since Trove was launched in 2009. RSref144477	Completed	7/5/2020	Hello I use Trove regularly and am generally happy with the new format. There is one small concern however. When I am correcting newspaper articles you have minimised the area that I can use. I only have about 2 or 3 lines to look at in the correction panel. The panel is blocked at the bottom by an ad for your digital supporter. Could you stop this showing up there please? Perhaps you could put it somewhere else. Thanks for providing this valuable research tool. Cheers [name redacted]	Dear [name redacted] Thank you for your feedback and for trying new Trove.. The blue banner at the bottom of the correction panel should disappear when you click on the 'match text' button. If it isn't would you be able to send us a screenshot of what you are seeing. If you are aware you can make the correction panel a little bigger by hovering over the black line above the 'match text' button and when it changes to a double arrow you can drag the line up a little bit to give you more lines. This does make the area for the original article a little smaller. I hope this information is helpful. RSref144625	Completed	7/8/2020	Hi TroveDo you have a list somewhere of your most recently-digitised newspapers? I have been researching a topic for some time and I am finding a whole lot of new pages from the Melbourne Herald and other newspapers that look unfamiliar, and (unless I missed something a while ago) I am guessing this is because they have only recently become available. If so, as a researcher it would help to have a list of the most recently digitised resources so that I can search them specifically. It could ALSO help to include in advanced search "newspapers digitised since &lt;&gt;" This would allow users to limit search results to new materials only. Thanks for your website - for me it is one of a few favourite places to go to on the web, and it is exciting to see the recent developments (though I am still finding my way around the new site when searching for a topic). Thanks - look forward to hearing from you.	Dear [name redacted], Thank you for your enquiry and suggestion relating to recently digitised newspapers. There is not a list of the most recently digitised newspapers, however you can check Newspapers and Gazettes coming soon page for titles currently being digitised. RSref144784	Completed	7/11/2020	Dear Trove. Firstly I am pleased with the revamp. Well done to all involved. Is it still possible to research a topic and have the findings come up from more than one paper at the same time? Eg Having relevant articles from the Euroa Gazette and The Euroa Advertiser appear one under the other. This no longer appears to be the case. It appears we can only have articles listed by one paper paper, and then have to return to the list of Victorian papers and select again. Secondly, re the list of papers. Is	Dear [name redacted] Thank you for your feedback and exploring new Trove. Sorry for taking so long to respond to your enquiry. When you want to search specific newspapers in a particular state or certain titles we recommend you try an Advanced Search of the Newspapers & Gazettes category (formerly called zones). To select multiple states and/or titles to include in your search you can add multiple titles into the search filter by starting to type the name of the newspaper, then click on the newspaper title or state when displayed. This will add the title or state to the search box in a green box. You can then add another title in the same field by repeating the process. When you execute your search it will then search over the newspaper titles selected. You can then refine your results is done by selecting the options on the right hand side, such as Date range and then Year, as well as Family Notices. Both old and new Trove have the same title filter operation under 'Refine your results'. The title filter is providing an overview of the results, for example, if you search on a term and number of titles are Victorian titles, that gives you extra context around the search. If the search results under this filter were listed alphabetically, it is likely that the same titles will appear at the top of the list and not accurately represent the range of titles. I hope this information is helpful.
